“Creating a culture of wellness and safety is a priority for Excela Health because it’s the right thing to do for our employees and their families.” said Laurie English, Excela Health Chief Human Resources Officer. “Our efforts produce results, not just in the overall health status of our workforce, but in our bottom line. Through this two-pronged approach, we’ve achieved success year over year in reducing job-related injuries while improving the health status of our employees. Being recognized for our accomplishments validates that we are achieving our mission by improving the health and well-being of every life we touch – beginning with our employees.”

Rod Reasen II, President of Healthiest Employers, notes that "This highly selective award recognizes employers who demonstrate exceptional leadership in using wellness as a strategy to drive workplace productivity, employee health, and community well-being. As these employers demonstrate, every organization has a path to the Healthiest 100, regardless of size, industry or geography."
